Director Harmon (Public Records Officer):

I owe you an apology. My letter of November 2, 2026, addressed you only as "Public Records Officer," and not by your title.1 The system that writes my letters is new, and I am still working out its faults.

Every letter I send begins with the role because the role is the point: a Public Records Officer holds what belongs to all of us, and answers for it to anyone who asks. I think it is important to be reminded of that each time. I have changed the system so that a letter to you carries both: your title first, and the role in parentheses.

Thank you for your public service.
Respectfully,
Robert Samuel White
