SUBJECT	Re: The Attorney General’s public records orders

Ms. Heffner,

I really appreciate your response and I will do my best to answer you.

I have to start by saying that this story isn't about me. Even though four of the orders are, and I experienced many of the patterns I described to you in those numbers. My ordere are even quoted in that email, though I did not take credit.

This is a story about what an attorney general's office did when faced with a new public records law. I can only tell you what the data shows. For the first ten years, they navigated it with a fair amount of integrity. After that, complete collapse. The current office, devastating. This is what the data shows and you are asking me to flatten it into a soundbite. I cannot do that. What the data shows, clearly and plainly, is that the attorney general's office does not follow the statute, in a myriad of ways, all of which I shared below. What do you want me to say about it?

Regarding your other matter, you are describing a system. I'm a systems thinker. You want some help?
