I softened something at the end of that document, and I know you will notice it. So let me be plain about it instead:

You will either release the records, in full, uncompromised, or we will go to court to settle it. It won't be tomorrow. It will be when I turn my attention to it, precisely what I already told you. And I understand: you probably want that. It's your arena. It's where you go to disappear the truth. And I am not blind to this fact. Which is precisely why when I do sue you, it will be for the records, and not for the case that remains perpetually available to me because you continue to abuse my rights.
